The present invention relates generally to the field of application performance management and more specifically to a method and system for managing application performance in enterprise computing systems. The design of an application such as a business enterprise computing system must typically consider both the application characteristics and the characteristics of the computing environment to which the application is deployed. A design must take into account both the maximum and minimum workloads that the application will handle. A design must also include provisions to handle failure of the application or the underlying infrastructure on which the application is deployed. A design must further include provisions for user management, authentication, authorization, and other features necessary to a business computing system such as the financial system of a corporation. Additionally, a design must consider the application network infrastructure of the enterprise computing system to which the application is deployed and the application of the underlying network infrastructure to which the application is deployed.
